With these materials the practical surgeon will be enabled to treat the majority of fractures. Reduction of Fractures. --I have endeavored to outline the preparation of the patient before the surgeon attempts reduction. I have tried to give you an adequate idea of the materials used in the dressing of fractures. The reduction of the fragments is of course the duty of the surgeon. If the fracture be of the simple variety the dressings I have mentioned will be Common Modifications 155 sufficient for the surgeon's needs. If, however, the fracture be compound, besides the necessary retaining splints, such surgical materials and instruments will be required as in other operations, and preparations should be made accordingly....
