Abenaki Autumn (Paperback)

By Richard Brian Clark

Outskirts Press, United States, 2008. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 201 x 127 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .War and passions erupt violently when Native American and European Cultures collide! Were I in my village tonight, I would hear the wind moving through the trees. I think maybe I might hear also a child laugh somewhere within a neighbor s lodge. Here I hear music coming from the large stone house, but I do not hear the wind working its way through these trees. Torches and candles burn everywhere as if to turn night into day, but your people do not gather around the flames. Your fires are only lit to provide light, and the brightness of this light drives away the peoples view of the stars from your night sky. Then while I wonder at why you would do this, you shoot make-believe stars and thunder up into the sky. When I breathe I cannot smell the earth of your land. All this is so, so different for me. Did my father run along the pathway leading north from our village? Did he search for sign possibly left by my moccasins as I passed...
